He is cousin to many breeds developed from the massive Molossian Hound, an ancient Greek guarding, fighting, and herding dog. From Greece to Rome to Europe and Britain, these dogs gave birth to a number of large, squareheaded breeds that assisted men in the hunt and at war. The Bullenbeisser diverged into two types, known as Danzigers and Brabanters after their areas of origin. The Brabanters were the smaller of the two; the Boxer developed from this branch of the family tree. Brabanters moved from castles and great manors to butcher shops, cattle farms, and theaters to ply their new trades of cattle management and acting. Somewhere along the way, dogs of this type became known as Boxers, perhaps for the manner of play that resembles a pugilists sparring, perhaps for their boxlike head. In 1895, they founded the first Boxer club in Munich, and in 1904 held their first show. The breed came to the US in 1903, and began to gain in popularity in the 1940s. Males stand 22.525 inches at the withers and weigh about 70 pounds. Females are a bit smaller at 2123.5 inches and about 60 pounds. The blunt muzzle leaves him susceptible to hot, stuffy conditions and can cause wheezing and snorting. White markings on muzzle, chest, belly, feet, neck, and inner legs are permitted to cover up to onethird of the body. The face must have a black mask, but a white blazeline is permitted from the muzzle upward between the eyes.

White, mostly white, and black dogs are disqualified from the conformation ring but can be registered and can compete in obedience and agility. He has a wellangulated rear with long haunches for great power. His back remains level when he moves for efficiency and endurance. He must be obediencetrained to control his exuberance and guide his mettle into acceptable channels. He is, after all, a big, strong dog. Left to his own devices, he can get into trouble. Writer and gentleman farmer Louis Bromfield had several Boxers in his home at Malabar Farm outside Mansfield, Ohio. These dogs learned to open the Frenchhandled doors and, so the story goes, managed to escape the house, climb in a visitors automobile, release the brake, and roll the car into a pond across the road. Aggression, extreme shyness not to be confused with independence, and hyperactivity are unacceptable in the breed; those who are considering a Boxer should at least check the parent dogs for these undesirable traits before even looking at the puppies. His coats natural sheen can be enhanced with occasional rubdowns with a chamois cloth. His short coat all but requires that he be a house dog in cool or cold climates, and his shortened muzzle makes hot humid weather uncomfortable for him. Dysplastic dogs should not be bred; thyroid dogs should be bred carefully to nonthyroid dogs. Thyroid disease can be controlled by medicine; dysplasia cannot be controlled and can be corrected or alleviated only by surgery. The incidence of these diseases is not high, and buying from an ethical breeder who provides health certificates, answers questions about her breeding stock, and offers a contract that backs up her dogs improves the chances of getting a healthy pet. He is easy care, intelligent, athletic, and faithful. What more could an owner ask You may print or download this material for All other rights reserved. Tente novamente After reading 9% of the book on my Kindle, I could stomach anymore. It is the worst written book I have read in a every long time. And I do mean the worst with out a shadow of a doubt. The writer could have packed this information in a short 10 pages and it would have been a better read. I can not believe they came up with five different ways to write that the dog is an escape artist or needs to be exercised daily.

Not only is this book written wrong, all wrong from a literature stand point, but the author has no clue about the breed. I own a Toy Fox and much of what I read was some home grown BS at best. Please take a writing class before you ever attempt to take on another topic. I wish Amazon would give me my money back on this digital copy. Desculpe, o registro do seu voto falhou. Tente novamente Absolutely worthless on grooming tips for this special breed of dog. This was such a disappointment that I put it back into the box to return. Do not buy this book. It is a waste of money. If you have no idea about dogs, then its passable. But if you want to know about Dandie Dinmonts, buy BettyAnne Stenmarks book instead. Female The coat is smooth and tightfitting; colors are fawn, brindled, or white, with or without white markings. Boxers are brachycephalic they have broad, short skulls, have a square muzzle, mandibular prognathism an underbite, very strong jaws, and a powerful bite ideal for hanging on to large prey. The Boxer was bred from the Old English Bulldog and the now extinct Bullenbeisser which became extinct by crossbreeding rather than by a decadence of the breed. The Boxer is part of the Molosser group. This group is a category of solidly built, large dog breeds that all descend from the same common ancestor, the large shepherd dog known as a Molossus. Bernards in Munich the next year. The length of the muzzle to the whole of the head should be a ratio of 13. Folds are always present from the root of the nose running downwards on both sides of the muzzle, and the tip of the nose should lie somewhat higher than the root of the muzzle. In addition, the breed standards state that the fawn background must clearly contrast with or show through the brindling.

The extreme piebald gene, which is responsible for white markings in Boxers, is linked to congenital sensorineural deafness in dogs. He is renowned from olden times for his great love and faithfulness to his master and household. He is harmless in the family, but can be distrustful of strangers, bright and friendly of temperament at play, but brave and determined when aroused. His intelligence and willing tractability, his modesty and cleanliness make him a highly desirable family dog and cheerful companion. Owing to their intelligence and working breed characteristics, training based on corrections often has limited usefulness. It is an instinctive guardian and can become very attached to its family. Boxers are generally more comfortable with companionship, in either human or canine form. Its task was to seize the prey and hold it until the hunters arrived. In later years, faster dogs were favored and a smaller Bullenbeisser was bred in Brabant, in northern Belgium. This was done in Munich in 1896, and the year before they founded the first Boxer Club, the Deutscher Boxer Club. Taken home by returning soldiers, they introduced the dog to a wider audience and soon became a favorite as a companion, a show dog, and a guard dog. George Alt mated Schecken with a Bulldog named Dr. Toneissens Tom to produce the historically significant dog Muhlbauers Flocki. Flocki was the first Boxer to enter the German Stud Book after winning the aforementioned show for St. Our great line of sires all trace directly back to this female. She was a substantially built, low to the ground, brindle and white particolor, lacking in underjaw and exceedingly lippy. As a producing female few in any breed can match her record. She consistently whelped puppies of marvelous type and rare quality. Those of her offspring sired by Flock St. Salvator and Wotan dominate all presentday pedigrees. Combined with Wotan and Mirzl children, they made the Boxer.

These dogs were the result from mixes of Bullenbeisser and other similar breeds. Bier beer probably refers to the Biergarten, the typical Munich beergarden, an openair restaurant where people used to take their dogs along. Any such action would likely result in a badly bitten if not broken leg. On the other hand, a German breeder of forty years experience states positively that the Boxer does not use his feet, except to try and extinguish a small flame such as a burning match. But a Boxer does box with his head. He will hit not bite a cat with his muzzle hard enough to knock it out and he will box a ball with his nose. Or perhaps, since the German dictionary translates boxer as prizefighter the name was bestowed in appreciation of the fighting qualities of the breed rather than its technique. Because of their brachycephalic head, they do not do well with high heat or humidity, and common sense should prevail when exercising a Boxer in these conditions. They sometimes appear at dog agility or dog obedience trials and flyball events. These strong and intelligent animals have also been used as service dogs, guide dogs for the blind, therapy dogs, police dogs in K9 units, and occasionally herding cattle or sheep. The versatility of Boxers was recognized early on by the military, which has used them as valuable messenger dogs, pack carriers, and attack and guard dogs in times of war.
