Needs a vent after the trap. Secondly, your furnace trap vent needs to be extended above the upstream connection point. Also, manual says it shouldnt be tied into the coil condensate line. This would be less of an issue if a vent was at the top of the stack. Second install is separated, but not vented correctly. York, for example, allows the two condensate lines to be tied together. With correct venting. I only reviewed the Concord 95G1 manual, maybe the manual you have for the furnace says all is ok. Additionally, condensate pump safety switch doesnt look tied into furnace controls. Id personally cut R since it is for AC and furnace. Warn customer if pump fails they have no heat. Sorry. The combustion air and exhaust venting is neatly done. Needs a vent after the trap. This would be less of an issue if a vent was at the top of the stack. customer if pump fails they have no heat. It looked wrong, so I spent 3 minutes reviewing the manual. It confirmed it was wrong. I always do my due diligence before posting on here, I really try to only post correct information, as I have done here. I was legitimately trying to be helpful!!! Constructive criticism. Sorry I hurt your feelings. My intentions were nothing but noble. It looked wrong, so I spent 3 minutes reviewing the manual. I always do my due diligence before posting on here, I really try to only post correct information, as I have done here. Sorry I hurt your feelings. My intentions were nothing but noble. I wish to only positively contribute to this website. I see no way forward with you. Good day sir. I wish to only positively contribute to this website. Good day sir. There is a larger life than following the letter of the law instructions.

It is called following the spirit of the law intentions, which cause end results. It takes someone that knows how to think. Choose your contractor wisely! We have been installing AlliedAir equipment for close to a decade now. Please keep up the good work. Suggestion. get a by install helper. You will get more done. Choose your contractor wisely! I wish to only positively contribute to this website. Good day sir. We have been installing AlliedAir equipment for close to a decade now. Please keep up the good work. Suggestion. get a by install helper. You will get more done. Your welcome. I am truly sorry, and perplexed, that this thread took the turn it did. I singled out the combustion air and exhaust venting as a positive due to not seeing primer and glue running down the pipe, plus you used proper hangers not all round strapping. Which is sadly more typical. It was a good example of you doing a thoughtful install. Overall it is of quality. Peace. I have a guy who has his own insurance. Generally, I can go to the job, start him off, then come back 34 hours later with lunch. He will have the boxes changed and be buttoning up the details. I will generally do the electrical and low voltage, check the vacuum and do the startup. I can leave him there to finish. And go by to do the fine tuning after they start it up. However like to get it done the same day. On the louvers of the outdoor units. I doubt any changes will happen. Just FYI condensing VS furnaces in the AlliedAir lines Ducane, Concord, AirEase, ArmstrongAir are hard to get. Thankfully, I have a couple of 70K 96% VS boxes in my storage. I think one is sold. The MOD furnaces are simply not available for now. We are too far south to have much demand for condensing furnaces. The big thing with AlliedAir for now. Yeah, it takes some expertise to get ALL the dirt. Choose your contractor wisely! Your welcome. I am truly sorry, and perplexed, that this thread took the turn it did. Overall it is of quality. Peace. Your welcome.

I am truly sorry, and perplexed, that this thread took the turn it did. Overall it is of quality. Peace. Let me foreword this by saying, I'm no stranger to deviating from best practice. If I need to make something work, I'll make it work. See my recent post in Wall of Shame for example. I do think venting is best practice. Also, unless there is a site specific physical restraint requiring me to, I just follow the manufacturer instructions. I'd rather not give a competitor reason to ridicule my install to a customer. Eg. Say there is furnace pressure switch issue and the manual says do it this way to prevent a pressure switch issue. Maybe a majority of time not having a vent is not a problem. But it only takes one time for it to come back on them. So, venting it is. In the unlikely event drain pipe outlet becomes blocked, the furnace will spill water out of the black factory trap vent outlet. If the vent had been extended up beyond the furnace outlet, you may get a blocked flue pressure switch fault I think that's right, indicating there is a problem that needs rectifying. Since tied together, water is coming out of the furnace vent pipe during AC use if outlet blocked. Concrete basement floors seem to be a magnet of peoples belongings. Bit of a worst case, do I want people to be uncomfortable for a day or risk water damage to family photo albums I choose my liability over their comfort. Again, really neat install!! IMO, a tee, couple feet of pipe and control cable would make it better. Post Them Here All rights reserved.
