Before a Direct Quote

Prior to quoting a whole sentence, provide the reader with a connection between the quote and the main point. Put a colon between a complete sentence and the quote.

Example: Ben Franklin's Almanac gives suggestions to help lengthen your cat's life: "A purring cat is, generally speaking, a relaxed, content cat. Recent studies suggest that the more your cat purrs, the greater its chances of a long and healthy life" ("Purr" 246).

Avoid Ghost Quotes! "Ghost quotes" are quotes that have no connection to your points. Always explain how a quote relates to the main point. The example given does NOT offer proper context. It is a ghost quote.

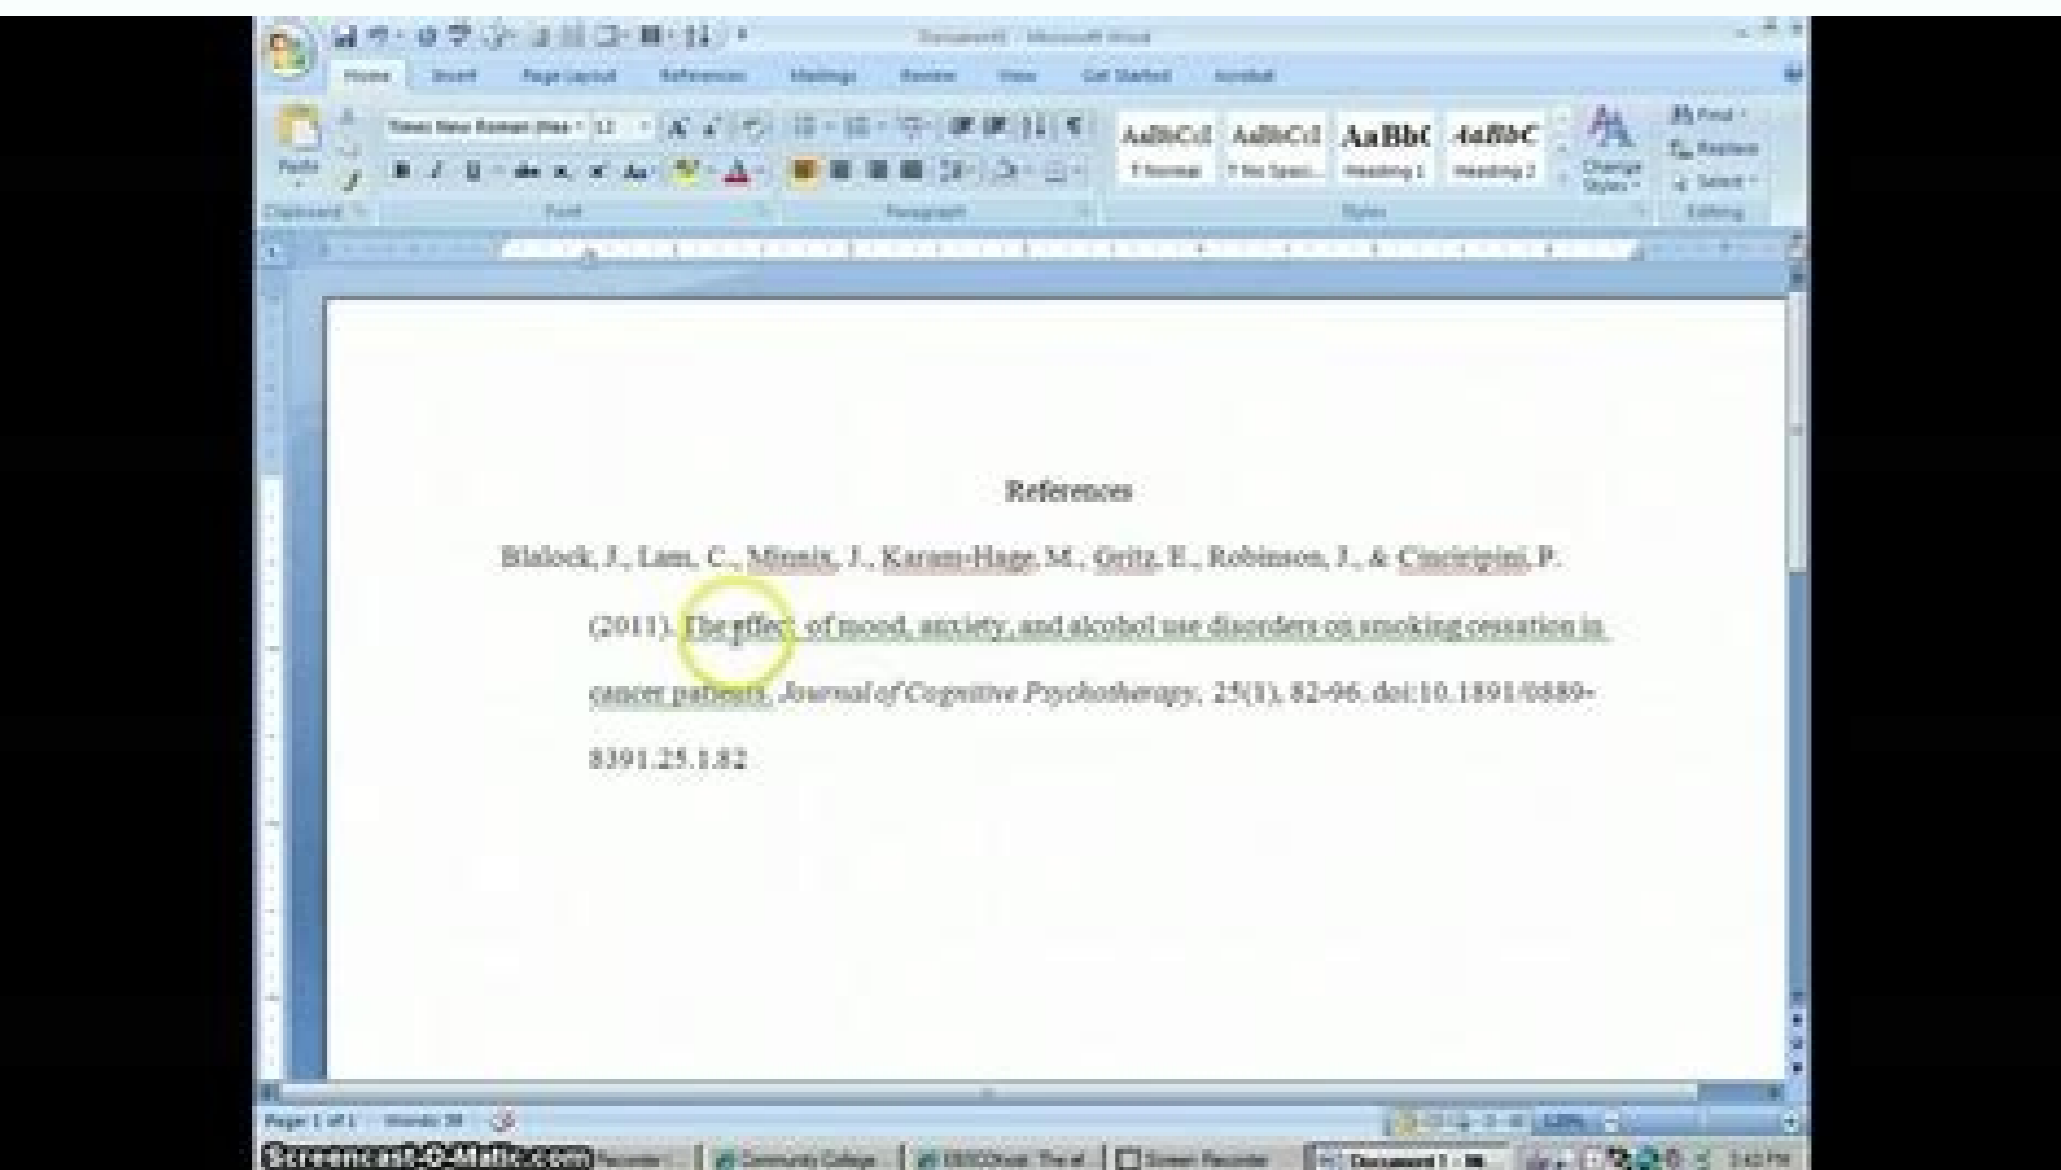

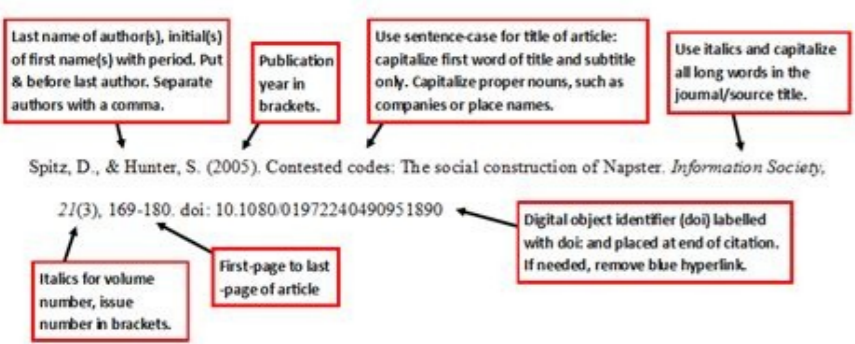

Error: Cats tend to curl up in bizarre places such as sinks, baskets, and boxes. According to Ben Franklin's Almanac, "A purring cat is, generally speaking, a relaxed, content cat" ("Purr" 246).

Note: Do NOT change the meaning of the quote to fit your point. Make sure to keep the author's original meaning when you are using their words or ideas.

Furthermore, there is beginning evidence that religious clients actually do respond better to therapy that is adapted to their religious values and concerns (Probst, Ostrom, Watkins, Dean, & Mashburn, 1992). Also, Kelly and Strupp (1992) found that "salvation," an explicitly religious value, was the only single client-therapist value that they studied on which therapists and clients significantly differed (due largely to the nonreligious of the Narrative: Parker (2019) found a correlation between the symptoms of social media use and the symptoms of anxiety in teenagers. The year of publication appears directly after the author's name when using the narrative format. The quotation in parentheses can be placed inside or at the end of a prayer, just before the period.
