One of the biggest shopping challenges for online clothing, apart from arbitrary dimensioning, is to understand if a certain color is going to look good on you. Of course, you probably have one or two go-to colors: shadows that people told you are okay with you. And this is great! (Although we must note that relying on this method is not always the best idea, because people often have very different opinions on what "he feels good." But there is another option: a free app and a website that finds your color palette ideal for you. That's how to use it. Are you someone who appreciates the subtle difference between two red-like shadows? You... Read more A short story of finding your color palette

The idea of taking skin tone, hair color and eye color into consideration when collecting clothing and makeup is not at all new. He began with color theory in the 1920s, was collected by old Hollywood costume designers, and continued to gain traction in the 1960s and 1970s. (For more information, read this article in Jezebel.) But dressing up through a palette of colors that works for you went mainstream in 1980, when the book of Carole Jackson Color Me Beautiful was published. Its system is removed, including quiz, video and a multi-level marketing operation (MLM). Maybe you had the pleasure of attending a party Color Me Bella at someone's house, where the consultant draped fabrics on the shoulder to help you understand if you are a summer, winter, spring or autumn. However, this is the general concept behind Colorwise. app and website, but without the pitfalls of an MLM. Whether you are designing a web page or simply trying to find the theme for decoration, having a good... Read more How to use Colorwise.me We first learned of Colorwise. me through the Recomendo newsletter: the source of many great hacks. You can use the service via their website or by downloading their app. Just take a selfie only face, upload it to the site, and then work with the recommendations (and your preferences) to find a palette of colors that will not let you look washed or sick. In addition to this, the application has all kinds of other features, such as scanning a garment, something you already own and love, and understanding its exact color so you can find something comparable when you buy online. Photo Courtesy: Jutta Klee / Getty Images Using Primer: Many of us have a friend whose eyeshadow seems to remain magically perfect all day. Do you ever ask how they do it? It is very likely that their secret is in a good primer. Similarly for paint for paint à € "bring with us, here à €" Primer creates a base and a more smooth consistency. Applying the primer to the eyelid before making your eye shadow, you create a thin barrier between makeup and natural oils in your skin. This can keep your eye shadow much longer and reduce the need for retouching. It also helps your shadow go on more smooth and prevent bending. Find the perfect shade for your eye color: not sure with what colors start? While some palettes are designed to create a certain style or mood, you can never go wrong with a color design that naturally completes the color of the eyes. If you have blue eyes, aim for bronze, fishing and gray tones to help your really pop eyes. For green eyes, plum or rust shadows tend to create a beautiful effect. Brown eyes are highly versatile, but gold and purple shades are particularly beautiful choices. Know your way around your palette: one of the most important parts to get a new palette is to know which shadow goes where, no matter what appearance or mood you decide to create. Generally, the slightest shadow is intended to serve as a basic color and go up to your line of ash right under your forehead. Then you select another slightly darker shade to cross the eyelid. Last but not least, use darker colors like your liner. Use a more subtle and angled brush to apply it just above the upper network line. Learn from the Masters: these days, there are so many beauty vloggers on YouTube who offer lessons on expert application techniques and ways to create moods and looks. Take a look at makeup pro videos like NikkieTutorials, Zoella and others.
