Kannada imperium

The Chalukya, Hoysala and Vijayanagara Kingdoms were roughly in the same region though they varied widely in size and history. Together they represent the best of the Kannada imperium from a military-political as well as cultural perspective.

The Chalukyas ruled from the 6th century to the 12th century as three related yet individual dynasties, from Vatapi (modern Badami, 6th century), shifting eastwards to Vengi in modern Andhra Pradesh after the death of Pulakeshin II in 642. The last phase, from the 10th century saw them set up at Kalyani (Basavakalyan) until they vanished from history sometime in the 12th century.

Hoysalas rule began in the 10th century, with the capital first at Belur and later at Halebidu. Originally from Malnad around the Western Ghats they occupied most of present-day Karnataka, parts of Tamil Nadu and Telangana. The last of the line, Veera Ballala III was killed at the battle of Madurai in 1343. His territories were merged into the kingdom of Harihara I, around the Tungabhadra River.

The Vijayanagara or Karnataka Empire rose on the carcass of the Hoysala, with Harihara and his brother Bukka credited as the founders. At its zenith it comprised the entire south, including the Chola and Pandya lands. It lasted just over 200 years but the remains at Hampi show just what an ornament it was to the Indian imperial tradition.
