Even if the succulents are considered easy to cure, you can not simply put them in a sunny place and forget. Like all living organisms, the succulents have specific needs. One of the most important is the light. Most succession plants need three to six hours of direct sunlight every day, depending on the type of plant you have. If your succulent begins to lean that it can be a sign that most be placed at a more sunny point. But the fat plants always lean in the sun, so even after finding a good point for your plant, make sure to rotate it often so that it grows straight. Keep in mind that too much direct sunlight can burn your plant. So if you live in a warm climate, filter the sunlight. Finally, if you decide to move your plant into a zone with significantly more sunlight, you need a couple of plants for the transition to the new point to avoid solar burns. Instead your succulent properly is another critical care component. First, make sure the plant is in a container with drain holes to prevent putrefaction Terracotta vessels are a good choice. Subsequently, immerse the plant in the cactus ground or in a mixture of land with sand, pumice or perlite, which also helps drainage. Immerse the ground until the water comes out of the drain hole, then leave it alone for a few days until the ground is dry.
À «The succulent plants do not like having wet feet. In general, you just have to water your succulent weekly. But if you live in a warm and dry climate, you may need to water your plan more frequently. During the winter, when the light is more dim and the succulents are sleeping, withdrawing irrigation. The other succulent health consideration is the temperature. Surprisingly, the succulents cheat well into a wide range of temperatures. That said, the most delicate succulents do not like extremes. Then avoid leaving plants with temperatures greater than 95 degrees Fahrenheit (35 C) or less than 32 degrees Fahrenheit (0 C). Through the fatty plants generally do not attract destructive insects, your plant can end up with some mosquitoes or floured worms. The gypsies appear if the soil of your succulent remains too wet, ie due to improper drainage. The floury worms can be on your plant when buying it, or may appear too much watering and fertilization. If an insect settles on your succulent, sprays the ground with 70% isopropyl alcohol to kill eggs and larvae of insects. Make sure you move all the infected plants away from their neighbors, too, so that insects are not spreading. Still problems with fat plants? Keep in mind that some fat plants are More suitable for indoor culture than others. Generally it is green varieties such as jade and aloe vera that prefer little light or shadow in the sun full. The fat plants dressed with more lively shades such as red, purple or orange generally are not good at the inside, as they need a bit of direct sunlight. Veterans Day is one of the eleven federal parties in the United States for federal organizations and is a public party for all 50 states. Unlike the day of memory, which is the day for The day of veterans is the place where the public celebrates those who have served in the US Army, whether it is the army, the marine, the body of the Marines, the national guard, or the aeronautics Or coast guard. The Veterans Day always celebrates at the end of October or early November and is a day full of fashion shows, discounts and a precious lesson in history. Here there are 5 interesting facts about veterans day. We celebrate it every year, but how was the veteran day born? Dates back to the signing of the Treaty of Versailles on June 28, 1919. While this day it will always be known as the official end of the First World War, also known as the Great War, it was November 11, 1918, that the war was truly terminated with the entry into force of the armistice, namely the temporary cessation of hostilities between German and allied nations. In the following November, in 1919, President Woodrow Wilson became known as the president who celebrated the first commemoration of the day of the armistice. The name changed after the Second World War and the Korea War in November 1938 when it became the Federal Festival we know and honor today, Veterans Day, dedicated to American veterans of all wars. On this day, every state celebrates its own veterans in its own way. The most common show is a parade full of veterans, school bands, American flags and patriotic music. The largest of these events takes place in New York, but the longest of veterans is held in the south, specifically in Birmingham, Alabama, and takes place since 1947. A DC, Arlington National Cemetery organizes a deposition ceremony of the garlands at the tomb of the unknown soldier, while the famous Blue Angels take over the skies of Pensacola, Florida. Churches participate in prayer services while government buildings proudly expose the red, white and blue flag. But let's not forget about food for veterans day. In addition to having great entertainment, veterans often receive fun discounts in local restaurants and shops. Fast food restaurants or restaurants often give free breakfast Veterans Day and drinks or sweets to those who have a valid form of military ID. While some have a veteran association card to show, others can offer discharge documents or even wear their uniform as their identification form, which can be sufficient for some places. Not only do the veterans receive discounts but, but the general public gets some advantages as well, one of them is free admission to any national park in the United States. Because it is a federal party, all non-essential government offices are closed for the day at local and state level. Which companies and schools are closed for the day even if it varies from state to state. Often banks are closed for Veterans Day, The Big Four, Jpmorgnan and Chase, Bank of America, Wells Fargo and Citibank. Also post offices, schools, libraries and markets have been closed, leaving national parks as a great option for your day day The day of veterans is much more than just parades, free music and food but. It is an opportunity to show our gratitude to military men and women fight to keep our country safe and free. It's a time when we can go back from the fall of our daily life and teach our children on the history of our country, battles have had to fight and fight that many continue to fight. Photo of courtesy: NBC / Getty images after the final episode of the Office, the fans still have never enough of the exhilarating mock. In 2018 it is ranked on Netflix as the most observed television series of the year, with a total of 52 million minutes in streaming. This is not illustrated what the show has happened, but the actors aroused at the beginning that they were destined for greatness? Take a look at these facts behind-the-scenes on the first days of the office. As the first episode filmed, nobody on the cast knew that it would become so immense success. They didn't know what would happen, period. As many know, the office is an adaptation of a British show, and the pilot episode has been encountered some criticisms because of this. Photo of courtesy: SuperRCAT / Wikimedia Commons Some reviewers said the show would not last long, that his comedy was at best mediocre and that they should not have to try to adapt to the show first. Those people are clearly biting their languages now, but at that moment he was discouraging feedback. The office did not try to hide the fact that it was an adaptation. The pilot episode closely follows the pilot of the British version with Ricky Gervais (in the photo), varying only in smaller ways. For example, they modified some jokes to make them more "Americans" and changed the substance of some scenes. Photo of courtesy: Ralph_Ph / Wikimedia Commons Anyone has seen the British version of the office, however, will not immediately notice the similarities. For some, this was a welcome re-use of a popular show. For others, it was a failed mimicry attempt. Despite some mixed reviews, the pilot episode was generally received positively. About 11 million people sat down to watch him, which is not a small figure - he was classified first among his competitors that evening and was the third most observed show throughout the evening. With these numbers, the "pilot" remains the second episode observed in the series. Photo Courtesy: NBC / Getty Images The only episode that in the past "pilot" was "stress relief" from the five season. This has reached almost 23 million spectators. No matter how you look at it, the office has observed its pilot episode from a long shot. Phyllis Smith (the actress who plays Phyllis Vance on the show) is not originally proven for the He had a job as an associate casting and spent his days of reading lines with other actors during auditions. He did so well to read scenes with actors who have decided to write him character of him in the show. Courtesy photo: Todd Williamson / Getty Images Thanks to this shot of Serendipity, Serendipity. He became a beloved character during the seasons and provided many hilarious moments. This is not the only case of improvisation, however à The Office was practically built around improvisation. There is a part in the first episode where Michael Scott makes Pam cry by firing her. This clip was actually a part of Jenna Fischer's audition tapes for the part of Pam. According to Fischer, they had to film this scene about 30 times - he just couldn't keep a straight face. Photo courtesy: Athena LeTrelle/Flickr If you look at the scene again, you can tell that she's trying not to break the character. She protects her face from the camera like she's crying, but she might as well hide some giggles. It's hard to imagine the office with someone else, but Steve Carell on the front lines, but there were two other contenders for his role. Carell almost had to give up the show due to planning problems, which would leave Bob Odenkirk at the helm. In the end, though, Carell made it work. Photo courtesy: Gage Skidmore/Flickr Other actors who auditioned for the role of Michael Scott include Rainn Wilson, who is the actor who ended up playing Dwight Schrute. His mastery of the Dwight character is unparalleled, so fans are definitely happy with the casting decisions. Since the Office was an adaptation, the actors had to familiarize themselves with the original British Office. John Krasinski (a.k.a. Jim Halpert) was a big fan of the English version of the show, but Steve Carell took a different approach. Photo Courtesy: Michael Connors/Wikimedia Commons Carell only watched enough of the British Office to get a feel for the show and the original character (David Brent) that would be emulating, but he didn't watch more than a few minutes. This was so the character of David Brent didn't influence his too much - he wanted to keep a little of originality. Often, the cast got so cracked that he couldn't get past a scene. Jenna Fischer says Steve Carell's "6 million dollars" dance in the pilot episode made her laugh so much that they had to film her face-to-stone reaction separately. They even had to kick Carell out of the room! Photo courtesy: Jim Spellman/Getty Images The scenes that were the hardest to shoot with a straight face did so on The Reels of Blooper Office, which fans of the show still love to watch. You can tell the whole crew enjoyed movies and that everyone had a great time on the set. It was crucial for the Office to really feel like an office building and for the mockumentary to look like a real documentary. To do this, they kept people to a minimum - only actors, director, cameraman and boom operator were allowed. Photo courtesy of Francisco Antunes/Flickr Also filmed the show in a real building in the office in California, imagined above. Sometimes, the crew had to show up at 7:30 am to filling up fake office. All these little touches made the show much more When the first episode was filmed, the producers thought the main cast would be composed by Steve Carell, Rainn Wilson, John Krasinski, Jenna Fischer and B.J. Novak. Clearly, things changed during the seasons, but these actors remained largely on the front line (with the exception of B.J. Novak). Photo Courtesy: NBC/Getty Images It was only later on the show that other cast characters found their niche - figures such as Phyllis, Angela, Oscar, Creed, Meredith, Toby and Kevin. Many of these support roles have been equally popular among fans as well as the main actors. Jenna Fischer describes the hearing process as rather unusual. Instead of using pre-written scripts, actors were asked various questions and expected them to respond as their characters. For some actors this was ideal: many had a background in improvisation, including Angela Kinsey (Angela) and Kate Flannery (Meredith). Photo Courtesy: Kristin Dos Santos/Flickr The reason why they conducted hearings in improvised style is understandable if you consider how the series was turned. Although much of it has been screened, actors often improvise scenes on the set. Because of this, they had to hire actors who could think up. During casting, there were several known actors who refused roles or simply did not get the parts. Paul Giamatti refused to play Michael Scott, while Hank Azaria and Martin Short auditioned but did not go great. Even Seth Rogen and Patton Oswalt auditioned for Dwight, but they were not the right choice. Photo Courtesj: Karon Liu/Flickr It would seem that the choice of less-known actors was the right choice for The Office "if a famous actor had been on the front line, he would have clashed with the realistic atmosphere and close to the office that made the show such a success. Since many of the cast members were less known actors, some of them saw The Office as their last attempt. Years of acting and improvisation did not push them to success, and it seemed that things would not go along. After all, many people believe that you can't "do" acting if you are already over a certain age. Photo Courtesy: Brad Cerenzia/Flickr Apparently not always true. And guys, the actors are happy to have taken the opportunity! In the end, the little goofy show brought them to unprecedented levels of fame and success. It is difficult to imagine actors of The Office who play roles other than those they received, but some of them hoped to take different roles. Angela Kinsey, for example, who played Angela on the show, originally auditioned for Pam Beesly. Photo Courtesj: Kristin Dos Santos/Wikimedia Commons Jenna Fischer's portrait of the receptionist, however, could not be beaten. and John Krasinski won their roles quite easily and showed a natural chemistry that the crew knew would work well on the screen. And Angela in Angela's role? He couldn't have been more appropriate. Surprisingly, some of the actors had known each other for a long time before being launched in the same show. Angela Kinsey and Oscar Nunez had improved together in a comedian show called a warm towel. Neither of them knew that the other would be a part of the show, but both were pleasantly surprised to find out. courtesy photo: iIya haykinson / Wikimedia Commons Commons John Krasinski and B.J. Novak also had links that went back. They had been in the same degree together during high school and even played on the same baseball team as the small league. Novak has a photo of them together as children. In an effort to make the set feel more realistic, the cast was asked to bring photographs from home. These may have been larger images than the actors or something similar to them that fit their characters. These have been left on their desks, as people do in buildings for real life offices. courtesy photo: Kristin Dos Santos / Flickr Phyllis chose a photo of herself in a warm pink bra and burlesque snidpy clothing from her dancing days as a young woman. This is an unexpected turn in Phyllis' BackStory, but one that works very well. If you can watch the first episode, there are some subtle Easter eggs hidden in the dialogue for the most attentive of fans. At one point, Michael asks Ryan Howard (B.J. Novak) if he is familiar with the punk show. This is funny because Novak had actually been on that show. courtesy photo: TechCrunch / Flickr There is also part when Dwight rounds the melody of "the little boy of the drummer." Whether intentional or not, this involves his relationship with Angela - in a later episode, sings "the rlyan boy of the drummer" while Dwight loyally holds his microphone. Like any office viewer knows, Angela and Pam have a real beef on the show. They rarely get along and are often discussing decorations for parties or birthday gifts while sharing the blinded looks through their cubicles. Ironically, these women are the best off-screen friends. courtesy photo: David Livingston / Getty Images Kinsey and Fischer also started their podcast together called Office Ladies. There, they chat about their experiences in the show and their post-office life. It's funny to think, all that time they were rivals on the screen, they were actually forming a friendship for the whole life. Do you know that opening scene of the iconic office - some building shots, the road and a road sign "Welcome to Scranton"? Well, these clips were actually shot by John Krasinski in the real town of Scranton, Pennsylvania. After taking Jim's share, he traveled to Scranton to get a feeling for the place. Photo Courtesy: Daniel Case / Wikimedia Commons Without knowing what purpose it might beHe took some videos while he was there. The crew loved it so much that they decided to use it on the show and the office's opening credits were born. The computers on the set were not simply props - they were actually hooked to the Internet. In all those scenes with Meredith, Stanley, I believe or Phyllis in the background working away, there were actually surfing the internet or playing solitaire. This helped them pass the time. Photo Courtesy: Kristin Dos Santos/Flickr Sometimes the cast would pay their bills using computers while the cameras were running. If you look closely, sometimes you can glimpse Meredith's computer screen with the solitaire cards lined up. Looks like they really lived the part of the employees. It might seem that the budding love story between Jim and Pam is the centerpiece of the show. After all, they were set up as flirting friends in the very first episode, but that's another equally important relationship for The Office. This is the relationship between Michael and Pam. Photo Courtesy: NBC/Getty Images Despite Michael's offensive behavior, Pam feels empathy and platonic affection for him. Michael, in turn, constantly shows how much he cares about Pam. It is interesting to note that Michael pronounced the opening lines of The Office, and Pam pronounces the closing lines in the final episode. Some of the crew members met in interesting ways. Jenna Fischer, for example, met Rainn Wilson while she was in the character for the audition as Dwight Schrute. Fischer says he thought he was the strangest person he'd ever met and only later learned his true personality. Photo Courtesy: David Shankbone/Wikimedia Commons Rainn Wilson also had a funny interaction with Angela Kinsey "when he introduced Kinsey to his wife, whom he called "the bearer of my semen". Rainn's wife was pregnant at the time. Looks like Rainn had a little too much fun playing Dwight. Another person running for the role of Jim was Adam Scott, an actor many now know for his success in Parks and Recreation. He might have gotten the part, too, if the executive producer hadn't been so lenient with John Krasinski. Photo Courtesy: BagoGames/Flickr Before Krasinski's audition, a man in the waiting room had a chat with him. Krasinski told him he was nervous that the adaptation would ruin the original English version. The man she was talking to was Greg Daniels, executive producer. Despite his mistake, Krasinski's audition demonstrated his readiness for the part. When John Krasinski got the role of Jim, he did not hesitate to conduct research. Not only did he travel to Scranton to see the town where the show was set, but he also interviewed the paper vendors to find out what the work was like. Photo Courtesy: NBC/Getty Images He met with several employees from different companies and asked them all he could about what everyday life was like in the workplace. These insights were undoubtedly useful for the initial episode, when Jim describes his position and says, "I'm honestly bored right now". During the first season, the attitude of the The Office was not as relaxed as it is today. Photo Courtesy: Eva Rinaldi/Flickr The saving grace, however, was Steve Carell à he had just done The 40-year-old Virgin, and his acting career was very promising. Because of this, they decided to renew The Office for a second season. Thanks to Carell, the show had the chance to take off. Just like Pam and Angela, Jim and Dwight are rivals. Show. Their jokes and hijinks were a constant source of fun for spectators, and have created a favorite dynamic for many fans. When I'm not on the screen, however, the two actors are very close friends. Photo of courtesy: NBC / Getty Images The men were in terms so big that they gave each other feedback and pointers on the set, which is a Big no-no between the actors. Sometimes they laughed so much that the whole production had to stop until they put together.
