Qualifications and prices are accurate and items are in stock on time of publication. 1 / 9alexei TM / Getty Imagelf you share your house with a Yorkie, Chihuahua, Pug, or any other small but powerful well, you know how playful, sweet and surprisingly brave they can be. However, what you may not know is that the dog food needed for small dogs thrives is something different from that of their guests more imposing dogs. Here, it's what you need to take into account to make sure your Wee Sweetie stays healthy. According to the American Kennel Club (AKC), 2 / 9PedsPhoto36pm / Getty Imagesdogs, including toy breeds, are not strictly carnivores, according to the American Kennel Club (AKC). Our domestic dogs need fruits, vegetables and grains for a full diet. By AKC, most commercial dog food contains all the nutrients that small dogs need to stay healthy. Those good news, as few owners are experts in dog nutrition. Those dry or canned foods you will find on the shelves will remove the conjectures. How can you verify? A quality dog meal will be labeled "complemented and balanced," and will consist of proteins, carbohydrates, fiber and vitamins and minerals. In general, this is the best diet for dogs, according to veterinarians. 3 / 9Vig / Getty ImagesBeyond The general guidelines should look for foods that are specifically labeled for small or toy races. What's the difference? øDog made for smaller dogs is more dense caloric as its metabolism is higher, explains Amy Aprende, VMD, a resident of the clinical practice medicine in the servicesFlorida veterinary behavior in West Palm Beach. In addition, the kibble will be smaller, so it will be easier than small mouths chew it correctly. While we are on the subject, make sure you know these 14 astute paths, dog food labels meet. 4 / 9S-CPphoto / Getty Images Images like the amount of food you should feed your small dog, follow the package instructions unless your veterinarian advises you otherwise. "Please note that small dogs burn more calories per pound than large dogs," says Jim D. Carlson, DVM, a holistic veterinarian at Riverside Animal Clinic in McHenry, Illinois. Hipoglycemia if they're not eating enough. That's why Dr. Carlson likes to make room in his own toy dog diet to eat snacks all day. "Not only a treat, but rather a mini-food" "maybe a few spoons of wet food" to keep the fire on a small dog." Recommend using a calorie meter for pets to stay on the track. If you want a soaked Peking, try these tips to slick overweight pets. 5 / 9PrzemysÅaw Icki/Getty Images Calories and nutrients are not the only thing that matters to small dogs. Having fresh water easily available is very important for toy races, says Dr. Carlson. Incorporating moisture in meals with occasional wet food also helps. Here's your personal advice: "My 8-pound Yorkie is spoiled, so when you don't eat the croquette right away, I add broth, I do at home with chicken bones or meat discarded in the slow pot. Finish your bowl, plus this offers additional hydration, which is always useful for a small breed. Some dog parents find the food linked up a bit of discomfort, especially because their puppy may not finish a whole can at once. Wet food, however, does not necessarily have to come in a can. You may want to consider the Canidae small bites, which come in 3.5 ounce plastic trays that can be cooled once opened. 6 / 9Swilana Symonenko/Getty ImagesAnother way to make sure your little breed puppy gets nutritionneed is through the rotating feed, basically, varying the sources of proteins, formulas and styles, instead of sticking to the same thing day after day. "This can be especially beneficial for small, small races get more quality protein", says Danielle Bernal, DVM, a veterinarian with Wellness Natural Pet Food. Dr. Bernal recommends changing the source of protein every day. If that seems too common, you can do it every week. åAlso, feed wet, dry foods to provide different textureså, he adds. åWet food can come in flakes, shreds and pawås. Here are some of the best brands of dog food that veterinarians feed their own pets. 7 / 9 Photo-Pekic/Getty Images Your food is not nutritionally appropriate for dogs, no matter how pious those puppy eyes are. In fact, some common foods can be toxic to dogs. So as long as it seems harmless to give your Shih Tzu a fried chicken bubble, no. åAlthough sometimes sharing what you're eating with your dog is tempting, it's not really in your best interestå, says Rachel Barrack, DVM, a veterinarian for Animal Acupuncture in New York City. "Popular food is often too rich and spicy and can wreak havoc on the canine digestive tract. Unknown foods can cause vomiting, diarrhea, or even inflammation of the pancreas, known as pancreatitis, which can be life-threatening. "In addition to health problems, it can be a hard habit to break. Your Westie may be super cute, but your incessant begging every night will not be. 8 / 9 Photo: Alexei tm/Getty Images So, with all that in mind, what should you buy? There are a lot of options on the market that will work well, but the vets we talk to definitely have some favorites. In fact, Dr. Carlson gives his dog a variety of them. For my eight-pound Yorkie, feed a combination, shares. "I really like Ziwi, which is a great addition to a small dog's diet and is very naturally made. Of the packaged kibble options on the market, I'm a big fan of Farmina Non-GMO, a crude dehydrated kibble that comes in a mini bite size.Antje Joslin, DVM, a veterinarian for Dogtopia, is a fan of the Royal Canin breed formulas for healthy pets. "I like them because because are supported by nutritional science and are appetizing. I feed my own dogs with the Royal Canin skin support formula", he says. "Purina Pro Plan and Science Diet both have some good foods as well. I'd be left with a brand that has nutritional research behind it. "And just for your information, she wouldn't recommend choosing a grain-free formulation unless your veterinarian has officially diagnosed your dog with grain sensitivity. If that's the case, a good option is Just Food for Dogs, which is handmade in small batches.Eukanauba is also worth a look, according to Sara Ochoa, DVM, a veterinary consultant at DogLab.com. But right now, she's giving Royal Canin to her 9-year-old Schnoodle, Ruby. "Your breed-specific foods are the easiest way to make sure your dog is getting the right amount of nutrients for each breed", she says. 9 / 9Thisislowery/Getty ImagesSmall breeds are among the most popular, and it's not hard to see why. They don't require a big house or yard. They are easy to travel with. And they're crazy-cute because they look like puppies forever. But don't put them all together. "Like people, dogs have many individual needs. There is no one size fits all food", says Dr. Joslin. "Age, lifestyle, and health conditions should be taken into account".Your veterinarian should be your guide for any questions you have about what specific food is ideal for your one-of-a-kind friend.
