You may have heard of prepositional phrases whilst studying English grammar, and in this article, we are going to be looking a little more deeply at what this is. We will be looking at a series of examples as a way of showing how the prepositional phrase works within a sentence and the rules surrounding its use, this will serve as a way of helping us to gain a better understanding of its function. What is a Prepositional Phrase? PinPrepositional Phrases - Created by 7ESL Prepositional Phrase Definition When we are talking about a prepositional phrase, we are referring to a group of words that are made up from a preposition, the object of the preposition, and words that modify that object. In most instances, the prepositional phrase is used to modify either a noun or a verb. The use of the prepositional phrase to modify a noun or a verb is known as either an adjectival phrase or an adverbial phrase, respectively. At the very least, the prepositional phrase will be made up from one preposition as well as the object which it governs, although there may be more than one preposition in place. The object of the phrase could be one of three things, as follows: a noun a verb which ends in -ing but acts as though it is a noun, this is also known as a gerund a clause There are many prepositions that you might see being used in a prepositional phrase. Let’s take a look at some of the most common ones. about to at before of by after during for behind in from over for with under Now that we are aware of how a prepositional phrase is formed, let’s take a look at some examples of them being used within a sentence. She came to the interview on time. Does he really go out with that girl? As we can see, the prepositional phrases begin with a preposition and a noun which they are working with, however there is also the option to modify that noun within the prepositional phrase, let’s look at this. Does he really go out with that pretty girl? In short, a prepositional phrase is a group of words that begins with a preposition. The object of a prepositional phrase is to function as an adjective or adverb. In the sentence “I’ve paid this bill twice by mistake”, by mistake is a prepositional phrase. Prepositional Phrase Examples Prepositional phrase examples that function as an adjective. The revised edition of the book is now out of print. This kind of machine is out of date. The two countries were at peace. The paintings are on show until next April. Younger workers tend to be at an advantage when applying for jobs. The doctor said that I should be on a diet. You’re not allowed to buy alcohol. You’re under age. Despite applying for hundreds of jobs, he is still out of work. A passport that is out of date is invalid. We are happy to be on vacation. Prepositional phrase examples that function as an adverbs. The kids spent all their time out of doors. For a change, it was a gloriously sunny day. I pushed the problem aside, at present it was insoluble. The second episode will be screened at the same time tomorrow. At the beginning of a ceremonial parade, he gives the order to march on. As regards John, I will write to him at once. Without warning, the tree crashed through the roof. I will climb up the highest mountain tomorrow. It annoys me when people talk during movies. By my watch it is two o’clock. With the help of cold water he was soon brought round. Never tell tales out of school. Within limits, this seems a not unreasonable request. Types of Prepositional Phrases The Prepositional Phrase Which Modifies A Noun A prepositional phrase can act on a noun and in this case it is acting in the same way that adjective would, the reason for this is that an adjective can modify a noun. In this case, we refer to the prepositional phrase as an adjectival phrase. Let’s take a look at some examples of this. The dog at the end is the largest. He always gets his clothes from the thrift store on Charles Street. My sister decided to move into a house in the mountains. In the above examples, we can see that the adjectival phrase is being used as a way of giving us further information on the noun. For example, if we look at the first sentence, we are given more information on the location of the dog, in the second sentence we are given more information on the location of the store. The prepositional phrase is giving extra description, this is what an adjective would normally do. The Prepositional Phrase Which Modifies A Verb In some instances, the prepositional phrase can act on a verb, in which case it would be behaving adverbially. The reason for this is because usually an adverb would be used to modify a verb. When a prepositional phrase is used in this way, it is known as an adverbial phrase. Let’s take a look at some examples of this. If you want to find out who is knocking the window, look behind you. Daniel ran along the street with grace. In the two examples above, you can see that the adverbial phrase gives us an answer to the question ‘in what manner?’ The first example might be an answer to the question ‘who is knocking on the window?’ The second example might be an answer to the question ‘how did Daniel run along the street?’ The Prepositional Phrase Which Acts As A Noun There are times when the prepositional phrase can act as a noun, but this does not occur very often. Let’s take a look at some examples of this. Over the rainbow is a magical place. Under the table is where there are a lot of crumbs. Rules Surrounding Prepositional Phrases There are, of course some rules when it comes to using a prepositional phrase. One of the main points of concern is the overuse of the prepositional phrase which can make a piece of writing sound much less elegant and flowing. As a rule of thumb, you should aim to only use one prepositional phrase for every 10-15 words within a written piece of work. Take a look at the following example. She liked to walk with grace and poise when she walked with her dog in the park full of trees. Whilst the sentence is grammatically correct, there are two instances where the word ‘with’ is used as well as two further instances involving the prepositions in and of. This can make a sentence sound clunky. Let’s now take a look at the sentence once some of the prepositional phrases have been removed. In the tree filled park, she likes to walk her dog with grace and poise. This sentence is much more concise and uses less prepositional phrases, yet still gives us the same information. Using the active voice over the passive voice is also a good way to avoid overusing the prepositional phrase.
